

NPAC Partners with Abbott House to Make Promising Futures a Reality

Long before Hermel “Junior” Remache founded Nanuet Prestige Auto Collision (NPAC), a thriving auto-body business on the verge of expansion, he had a mind for business and a heart for giving back.

As a boy growing up in Washington Heights, Junior learned the value of hard work and discipline from his parents who immigrated to the United States from Ecuador. The couple worked hard in their businesses (JMR Sports League and Remache Deli Candy Store) to ensure that he and his five siblings would have every opportunity to thrive and be successful. There were times they struggled, but they always had each other.

Family comes first to this devoted husband and father of two. In fact, Junior's dad Jose and sister Jessica are part of the team at NPAC, and he credits them with keeping him humble and grateful. He considers his customers an extension of his family and is committed to providing them with exceptional experiences. Junior believes his highly skilled team and superior customer-service are what sets his business apart from other shops in the competitive auto body industry

His love of cars began at an early age.

When Junior was five years old, his parents took him to Riverside Park one afternoon. He recalls that day because a shiny new red corvette pulled up in the parking lot, drawing the attention of everyone who ran over to hear the engine and peek inside. However, it seemed like no one was more mesmerized by the car than Junior. With his parents' permission, the driver of the car let young Junior sit inside the cabin and turn the steering wheel. It was an unforgettable moment. Little did Junior know that later in life he would make a successful business out of restoring similar cars to their shining beauty.

When Abbott House received a donation of a 1988 classic corvette, we approached Junior to see if he would give it a little TLC and return the car to its original luster. He smiled big and replied, “Thank you for giving me the opportunity to do something for the children and families at Abbott House.”

Junior’s team at Nanuet Auto has been busy preparing the car for its big reveal. The classic corvette is being raffled in support of Abbott House’s mission in a limited-ticket raffle and will be on display at the Dave Wade Memorial Golf Outing - - only 250 tickets will be sold at $100 a ticket.
